I Fear No-one

Peel recognized it. So did Fluff. In 1979 The Transmitters were several decades and decibels ahead of even the most hardened post punk rocker. Now we've had our urban ears syringed by the likes of Franz Ferdinand and The Killers, we can all slip as comfortably into The Transmitters new compilation album as if it was a comfy old pair of slippers. Only a lot louder. In the words of Paul Morley of the NME, following a gig at the Greenwich Theatre: "The Transmitters are the cheekiest group I've seen since the Mekons, the wackiest group I've seen since Public Image (and almost as sinister). They were, of course, great."
