

BLURT

After an introduction by Joey Ramone, Batars hits the stage prancing around in a shiny black PVC get-up that brings to mind Freddie Mercury's outfits in Queen's Jazz/The Game period. The first song is their trademark anthem, "Sonic Reducer," which they evidently like so much they perform it twice. Ironically, the highlight isn't one of their own songs, but a sizzling cover of the Stooges' "Search and Destroy," a clear testament to their allegiance to the spirit of rock 'n' roll. Unfortunately, the camera work is very basic, filmed from the back of the hall, with occasional zooms.

Special features: 1980 TV interview, "Sonic Reducer" video.
GILLIAN G. GAAR