Darzamat – Live Profanity (Visiting the Graves of Heretics) DVD (Metal Mind)

Over the course of the DVD my sympathy for Polish band Darzamat grew. Musically, the mixture of death, black, and gothic is not entirely my cup of tea, but this video-package as a whole gave me 140 minutes of fun. Biggest chunk has been filmed at Katowice on March 24, 2007. Both the sound and images are really worth looking at, while you can bang your head to 11 different songs. But is it just me or is only a very small part of the audience interested in their fellow countrymen and woman? As extras we get three official videos, an interview, audio tracks, and a tour report. The photo gallery and wallpapers are not really adding anything in that aspect. Overall another great document by Metal Mind on one of the most important Polish metal bands.

Dead Boys – Night Of The Living Dead Boys – Halloween Night 1986 DVD (MVD)

For those of you NOT born prior to the dawn of the 1980s who may have gained an interest in the Dead Boys in one way or another (smart kids!), do us all a favor before viewing this DVD: go to Google and type in the word 'video' (a word which you are somewhat familiar with, despite the fact that you don't truly understand its actual meaning) and the word 'tape' (just trust me on this one, seriously) together; click on an interesting-looking page or two (it'll seem tough because every page will look to you like those pages you have to view while researching papers for your class in Ancient History); work through your bewilderment (ask mom and dad to help, they may actually have useful knowledge on this subject!); then keep all that information in mind as you watch the beauty of this Dead Boys performance unfold. For the rest of you (kids like myself), you know what you're getting: this Dead Boys, live in 1986. The setlist is pure gold, the performance is amazing, and the bonus features (the 'Sonic Reducer' video and a hilarious appearance by the Bators on a small-town morning chat show, replete with Will Ferrell-lookalike host) are a true bonus. Stiv B. Cheetah Chrome, Jimmy Zero, Jeff Magnum, and Johnny Blitz. Onstage. On fire. Oh, the humanity! Essential. The Impaler.
