Rating: 6 stars

Attitude for Destruction is a b-horror movie that revolves around a parody band called Hollywood Roses, which kinda parodies Guns N Roses somewhat, & the core of the movie is focused on a band that plays the Sunset Strip music scene in CA, get an offer to sign with a record label if they dump their singer, so the band kills their singer accidentally in a violent fight that breaks out after they tell him he's fired, & the band's singer then comes back to avenge his death by killing the band's members, the guy who signed the band & basically, it's kinda like the Freddie Krueger concept where the slain singer attacks the ones who harmed him through their dreams, & there's loads o' blood, guts, babes & rock n roll insanity, & when you watch the movie, it's clear that it's a low budget horror flick, but it's also part of the charm of this movie, because there's no famous actors, there's NO big productions, it's all very low budget, & if you watch the movie as a complete piece of work, it's fun in its campy approach to representing the rock n roll world & the horror genre all in one! The guy who plays the character of "Slash" from Guns N Roses couldn't have a worse wig either! lol
